Kirby Hall was named in honor of Mrs. Helen Marr Kirby, the University's first dean of women. It is a Methodist dormitory for girls located five blocks north of the main campus. This last year it accommodated a capacity crowd of one hundred sixteen girls.

While Kirby Hall is Methodist in control it is decidedly interdenominational in occupancy. It is open to girls of all religious beliefs, and nearly all denominations are represented on its list of residents.

There is one feature, however, in which Kirby Hall differs from the nondenominational dormitories on the campus. That is the Sunday evening vesper service conducted by the girls with the frequent assistance of outside artists from Austin and vicinity.

The dormitory organization, under the leadership of the House Council, sponsored during the year an interesting variety of social functions, outstanding among which were: a number of formal birthday dinners, one other special formal dinner, winter and spring formal dances, monthly open houses, informal pajama parties, picnics, and a party in the spring honoring the senior women of the University.
